FROM THE EDINBURG REVIEW.

CRITICISM.

Hints to Young Ladies, on the Improvement of the Mind.

BY THOMAS BROADHURST.

THERE are a few common phrases in circulation, respecting the duties of women, to which we wish to pay some degree of attention, because they are rather inimical to those opinions which we have advanced on this subject. Indeed, independently of this, there is nothing which requires more vigilance than the current phrases of the day, of which there are always some resorted to in every dispute, and from the sovereign authority of which it is often vain to make any appeal. 'The true theatre for a woman, is the sick chamber;'—'Nothing so honourable to a woman, as not to be spoken of at all.' These two phrases, the delight of Needledom, are grown into common-place upon the subject; and are not untrequently employed to extinguish that love of knowledge in women, which, in our humble opinion, it is of so much importance to cherish. Nothing, certainly, is so ornamental and delightful in women, as the benevolent virtues; but time cannot be filled up, and life employed, with high and impassioned virtues. Some of these feelings are of rare occurrence—all of short duration—or nature would sink under them. A scene of distress and anguish is an occasion, where the finest qualities of the female mind may be displayed; but it is a monstrous exaggeration, to tell women, that they are born only for scenes of distress and anguish. Nurse father, mother, sister and brother, if they want it;—it would be a violation of the plainest duties to neglect them. But, when we are talking of the common occupations of life, do not let us mistake the accidents for the occupations;—when we are arguing how the twenty-three hours of the day are to be filled up, it is idle to tell us of those feelings and agitations above the level of common existence, which may employ the remaining hour. Compassion, and every other virtue, are the great objects we all ought to have in view; but no man (and no woman) can fill up the twenty four hours by acts of virtue. But one is a lawyer, and the other a ploughman, and the third a merchant; and then acts of goodness, and intervals of compassion and fine feeling, are scattered up and down the common occupations of life. We know women are to be compassionate; but they cannot be compassionate from eight o'clock in the morning till twelve at night;—and what are they to do in the interval? This is the only question we have been putting all along, and is all that can be meant by literary education.

Then, again, as to the notoriety which is incurred by literature.—The cultivation of knowledge, is a very distinct thing from its publication; nor does it follow, that a woman is to become an author, merely because she has talent enough for it. We do not wish a lady to write books,—to defend and reply,—to squabble about the tomb of Achilles, or the plain of Troy,—any more than we wish her to dance at the opera, to play at a public concert, or to put pictures in the exhibition, because she has learned music, dancing and drawing. The great use of her knowledge will be, that it contributes to her private happiness. She may make it public; but it is not the principal object which the friends of female education have in view. Among men, the few who write, bear no comparison to the many who read. We hear most of the former, indeed, because they are, in general, the most ostentatious part of literary men; but there are in numerable men, who, without ever laying themselves before the public, have made use of literature to add to the strength of their understandings, and to improve the happiness of their lives. After all, it may be an evil for ladies to be talked of; but we really think those ladies who are talked of only as Miss Edgeworth, Mrs. Barbauld, and Mrs. Hamilton are talked of, may bear their misfortunes, with a very great degree of christian patience; and such singular examples of ill fortune, may perhaps render the school of adversity a little more popular than it is at present.

Their exemption from all the necessary business of life, is one of the most powerful motives for the improvement of education in women. Lawyers and physicians have in their professions a constant motive to exertion; if you neglect their education, they must in a certain degree educate themselves by their commerce with the world: they must learn caution, accuracy, and judgment, because they must incur responsibility. But if you neglect to educate the mind of a woman, by the speculative difficulties which occur in literature, it can never be educated at all: If you do not effectually rouse it by education it must remain forever languid. Uneducated men may escape intellectual degradation; uneducated women cannot. They have nothing to do; and if they come untaught from the schools of education, they will never be instructed in the school of events.

Women have not their livelihood to gain by knowledge; and that is one motive for relaxing all those efforts which are made in the education of men. They certainly have not; but they have happiness to gain, to which knowledge leads as probably as it does to profit; and that is a reason against mistaken indulgence. Besides, we conceive the labour and fatigue of accomplishments, to be quite equal to the labour and fatigue of knowledge; and that it takes quite as many years to be charming, as it does to be learned.

Another difference of the sexes is that women are attended to, and men attend. All acts of courtesy and politeness originate from the one sex, and are received by the other. We can see no sort of reason, from this diversity of condition, for giving to women a trifling and insignificant education; but we see in it a very powerful reason for strengthening their judgment, and inspiring them with the habit of employing time usefully. We admit many striking differences in the situation of the two sexes, and many striking differences of understanding, proceeding from the different circumstances in which they are placed; but there is not a single difference of this kind which does not afford a new argument for making the education of women better than it is. They have nothing serious to do;—is that a reason, why they should be brought up to do nothing but what is trifling? They are exposed to greater dangers;—is that a reason why their faculties are to be purposely and industriously weakened? They are to form the characters of future men; is that a cause why their own characters are to be broken and frittered down as they now are? In short, there is not a single trait in that diversity of circumstances, in which the two sexes are placed, that does not decidedly prove the magnitude of the error we commit, in neglecting (as we do neglect) the education of women.

If the objections against the better education of women could be over-ruled, one of the great advantages that would ensue, would be the extinction of numerous follies. A decided and prevailing taste for one or another mode of education there must be. A century past it was for housewifery,—now it is for accomplishments. The object now is, to make women artists,—to give them an excellence in drawing, music, painting and dancing,—of which, persons who make these pursuits the occupation of their lives, and derive from them their subsistence, need not be ashamed. Now, one great evil of all this is, that it does not last. If the whole of life, as somebody says, were an olympic game,—if we could go on feasting and dancing to the end,—this might do; but this is merely a provision for the little interval between coming into life, and settling in it; while it leaves a long and dreary expanse behind, devoid both of dignity and cheerfulness. No mother, no woman who has passed over the few first years of life, sings, or dances, or draws, or plays upon musical instruments. These are merely means for displaying the grace and vivacity of youth, which every woman gives up, as she gives up the dress and the manners of eighteen: she has no wish to retain them; or, if she has she is driven out of them by diameter and derision. The system of female education, as it now stands, aims only at embellishing a few years of life, which are in themselves so full of grace and happiness, that they hardly want it; and then leaves the rest of existence a miserable prey to idle insignificance. No woman of understanding and reflection can possibly conceive she is doing justice to her children by such kind of education. The object is, to give to children resources that will endure as long as life endures,—habits that time will ameliorate, not destroy,—occupations that will render sickness tolerable, solitude pleasant, age venerable, life more dignified and useful, and therefore death less terrible; and the compensation which is offered for the omission of all this, is a short-lived blaze,—a little temporary effect, which has no other consequence than to deprive the remainder of life of all taste and relish. There may be women who have a taste for the fine arts, and who evince a decided talent for drawing, or for music. In that case, there can be no objection to their cultivation: but the error is, to make these things the grand and universal object—to insist upon it that every woman is to sing, and draw, and dance—with nature, or against nature,—to bind her apprentice to some accomplishment, and if she cannot succeed in oil or water colours, to prefer gilding, varnishing, burnishing, box making, or shoe-making, to real and solid improvement in taste, knowledge, and understanding.

A great deal is said in favour of the social nature of the fine arts. Music gives pleasure to others. Drawing is an art, the amusement of which does not centre in him who exercises it, but is diffused among the rest of the world. This is true: but there is nothing, after all, so social as a cultivated mind. We do not mean to speak slightingly of the fine arts, or to depreciate the good humour with which they are sometimes exhibited; but we appeal to any man, whether a little spirited and sensible conversation—displaying, modestly, useful acquirements—and evincing rational curiosity, is not well worth the highest exertions of musical or graphical skill. A woman of accomplishments may entertain those who have the pleasure of knowing her for half an hour with great brilliancy; but a mind full of ideas, and with that elastic spring which the love of knowledge only can convey, is a perpetual source of exhilaration and amusement to all that come within its reach:—not collecting its force into single and insulated achievements, like the efforts made in the fine arts—but diffusing, equally over the whole of existence, a calm pleasure—better loved as it is longer felt—and suitable to every variety and every period of life. Therefore, instead of hanging the understanding of a woman upon walls, or hearing it vibrate upon strings—instead of seeing it in clouds, or hearing it in the wind—we would make it the first spring and ornament of society, by enriching it with attainments upon which alone such power depends.

By arrivals at New York and Boston.—London dates to July 28.

FRANCE. PARIS JULY 2, 1810.

Dittressing Fire.

YESTERDAY the Austrian Ambassador, Prince Schwarzenburg gave a grand fete, at which the Emperor, Empress, and all the Imperial and Royal personages were invited. Twelve hundred assembled—to accommodate whom the Prince caused a temporary ball-room to be erected in his garden, which was covered with gauze, muslin and other light stuffs. During the dancing of a Scotch reel, when the Emperor and Empress were at different parts of the saloon, the drapery of a window curtain near the Emperor took fire from a candle. Many of the attending officers endeavoured to tear off the curtain, but the flames ascended so rapid as to be instantly out of reach. The Emperor went immediately to the Empress who was in her chair, where they were surrounded with the Austrian and other Ambassadors, &c. acquainted of their danger, and requested to retire: which the Emperor did slowly, recommending calmness to prevent disorder. The fire spread like lightning, but the avenues were numerous, and the company easily escaped into the garden. The separation, however, of mothers from their daughters, who were dancing, occasioned a scene of great distress and inquiry. The fire was so rapid, that the Queen of Naples having fallen, was only saved by the presence of mind of the Grand Duke of Wurtzburg. The Queen of Westphalia was carried from the saloon by the King and Count Metternich. The Viceroy of Italy, with the Vice Queen, perceiving the fall of the lustres and ceilings, escaped by a back door into the hotel. The Prince Kurakin, the Russian Minister, the Ladies of the Russian Consul, Baron Toufard, and the Prefect of Paris, were injured by falls.

The Princess Pauline Schwarzenburg (sister in law of the Austrian Ambassador) lost her life.—She was among the last who remained in the ball-room, and was leading one of her daughters out, when a piece of burning wood fell on her daughter, which a man took up and threw away. In the confusion, the Princess was hurried into the garden: missing her daughter, she flew in search of her, and heroically entered the burning saloon, where she perished, and was found the next morning greatly disfigured, being known by her diamonds and the medallion of her children, which she wore on her neck. Her husband had been in search of her all night.—She was a French woman, daughter of the Senator Arremberg: the mother of eight children, and four months advanced in pregnancy.

LONDON, JULY 28 The Continental papers represent the loss by the fire at the Austrian Ambassador's in Paris, to have been more calamitous than has been represented in the Paris papers. The Ambassador was very much burned and wounded. Prince Kurakin was burnt in the hand and feet. The Prussian Minister, Krosenark, was also wounded. The Princess of Leyon, wife of the Russian Consul, is since dead of her wounds. It is reported, that this fire was not the effect of accident, but the work of an incendiary: but nothing can be more likely, than that some part of the light drapery of a temporary ball-room should be blown in contact with some one of the numerous lights with which such places are illuminated.

ENGLAND. LONDON, JULY 26, 28.

Affairs of Holland.

On the 1st July, previous to his abdication of the throne of Holland, the ci devant King Louis addressed a long note to the Legislative Body of that mock kingdom: in which he recounts the tyrannical measures directed by his brother, the Emperor of France, against Holland; in covering its territory with a mercenary army, and gangs of French Custom house officers.—He declares that it was his (Louis') refusal to permit these gangs, contrary to treaty, to prowl over his kingdom, and his opposition to the occupancy of Amsterdam by French troops, that had provoked his brother: and induced him (the Emperor) to order troops to take possession of the capital.—In this situation Louis declares he could no longer wear the crown, and had taken the fixed resolution to resign it in favour of his son Louis Napoleon. He adds his hopes that this measure will tend to reconcile France and Holland, and that his brother so violently irritated against him, will not be so against his children: and exhorts the Hollanders to receive the French troops with kindness, and to treat them as the best friends of Holland.

Such is the substance of this note.—Whether it be true, or whether it be the juggling of an arch hypocrite and dupe, to furnish Napoleon with a pretence to seize on Holland, and melt it down in his great nation destroying crucible, let the World, who have eyes and ears, judge.

HOLLAND NO MORE!

On the 9th of July, the French Emperor decreed that Holland should be annexed to the French Empire; that it should have six Deputies in the Senate, six in the Council of State, and 25 in the Legislative Body: that the Duke of Placentia [Le Brun, the Ex Consul] should be Lieutenant General of the Department, and that Amsterdam should rank as the third city of the Empire. The Dutch department of foreign affairs is abolished, the other offices are continued but are to be filled by Frenchmen. The Dutch Royal guards (5000) have marched for Spain: and Amsterdam is garrisoned with twenty thousand French soldiers, billeted on the inhabitants, who are compelled to furnish each one daily, with 24 ounces of bread, a gill of gin, two ounces of vegetables eight ounces of meat and a pot of beans. The young Dutchmen are to be conscripted for soldiers. Every Dutch fishing boat is to carry a French soldier in it, and if any one is detected in smuggling, then a general embargo is to be laid on all the fishing vessels!

The Emperor Napoleon has refused to confirm the resignation of his brother Louis in favour of his nephew Napoleon Louis: the latter, he says, being already Duke of Berg and Clevis is provided for.

The Ex King Louis is with his brother Jerome, in Westphalia.

The Ex Queen of Holland—the daughter of the Empress Josephine, and recently the favorite of Napoleon, is very sick at Plombiers. Since the marriage alliance with the Austrian Princess, poor Hortense Eugenie is out of favor with Napoleon; and it is strongly suspected that the heart-ache is not the only malady he has by proxy administered to her. [It is reported from Heligoland that she is since dead.]

Le Brun is to direct the affairs of Holland, after the 1st January, 1811, to which period all the taxes, &c. are to be continued. The measure of the consolidation was preceded by a long and able note from Champagny, Duke of Cadore, who says, "The annexation of Holland to France is the necessary consequence of the union of Belgium.—It completes your Majesty's empire, as well as the execution of your system of war, politics, and trade. It is the first, but a necessary step towards the restoration of your navy; in fact, it is the heaviest blow which your Majesty could inflict upon England."

Affairs of Portugal.

JULY 26 Reports were yesterday in circulation, that Lord Wellington was in full retreat for Lisbon. But we cannot trace the report to any authentic quarter. The public must expect at least once a day to be agitated by similar reports. This report was circulated as early as the 21st. said to have been from a schooner spoken in the chops of the channel.

Capt. Burgh, one of Lord Wellington's aids, has arrived with despatches from his Lordship, dated 4th July, when he was posted between Almeida and Celorico. His last movement has probably been made in consequence of the actual or expected fall of Ciudad Rodrigo, which could not hold out longer than the 5th. His Lordship has, we learn, between 30 and 40,000 men less than his enemy.

LONDON, JULY 26. German papers state, that the Russian troops in Turkey have been very successful; and had compelled the Grand Vizier to abandon Schumla; that the latter had been compelled to solicit an armistice of two days, which had been refused. Russia demands, as the price of peace, the cession of Moldavia and Wallachia, and the payment of 30,000,000 piastres to defray the expenses of the war.

The two Caracccas deputies, Don Juan de Volebar and Don Jose Seon, left London yesterday to embark for the United States of America. They have been treated with great civility by Ministers: but our treaties will not permit their being officially recognised.

FAILURES.

The Country Banks are beginning to experience the effects of large discounts and commercial embarrassments.—Two banks in Salisbury, and one in Exeter, Totness, Chester Plymouth, Shrewsbury and Shrewsbury have stopped payment. The Gazette announces the failure of two of them. Five houses, in the Manchester trade, have stopped payment in the city for more than a million. On Friday and Saturday, there were 13 or 14 failures on the Stock Exchange: but this was so far from affecting the Funds, that they rose two per cent. on the latter day. Mr. Walter Cope, the Lottery Contractor, is among the lame ducks.

The above five houses have failed for £1 766,602 but they have £2,167 404 property to pay it. It is added, that many of the houses have received assistance, and that by a timely interference, the rapidly-increasing failures have been checked and confidence has been restored.

JULY 21. Yesterday being settling day, a great scene of confusion and distress was experienced on the stock exchange. Ten Stockholders were declared defaulters.—The funds were at first depressed by the event, but afterwards recovered confidence. All the failures are among the new speculating firms, and desperate adventurers.—☞ As the last date (July 28) the 3 per Cents were at 68 to 69.

BOSTON, SEPT. 6.

PHI BETA KAPPA.

On Thursday last, this highly respectable literary society celebrated its anniversary at the Meeting-house in Cambridge. The ordinary exercises are a poem and an oration in the vernacular tongue. Independently of the convention of members, there was a brilliant assemblage of taste, talents and fashion to witness the performances. The Rev. Mr. Fisk very appropriately addressed the Throne of Grace.—Mr. Allen pronounced an oration, to which, however extravagantly it was admired, we cannot accord our unqualified approbation. It was nevertheless highly creditable to the talents of the author. We complain of the train of thought in certain parts, rather than of the style of the illustrations. We cannot yield to the opinion that we have so far outstripped ancient and cotemporaneous nations in intellectual advancement as to have purged away, by the process of alchymy, the impurities of literature and the dross of science. The fine gold is not only dim, but it is still deeply tinctured with alloy. Neither have we any faith that our political institutions are so healthy and vigorous, or the institutions of all other countries so impotent and bloated, as the orator would have induced us to believe. Such opinions honestly entertained are the characteristics of a very young man.

Of Mr. Alston's Poem, we cannot speak in the language of hyperbole. He exhibited a Gallery of Portraits, which would have been a passport to fame in the Royal Academy. In the just exhibition of a groupe of characters, satire must necessarily be a predominant feature :—But he has, occasionally indulged in strains of discriminating praise—which not only RAPHAEL and ANGELO could have endured ; but to which they would have listened with rapturous delight. If we were not tranced into deception, the whole poem was executed in the best manner of the great master of melody. The delivery was chaste, graceful and dignified. The countenance and gesticulation of the speaker were the genuine commentaries of his sense. This gentleman has not only trodden classic ground, but has caught much of the inspiration of other ages. He is an historical painter of the highest order : and he blends genius with modesty in a most eminent degree. While he blazes like the diamond, he blushes like the rose.—We most sincerely hope that the tasteless spirit of avarice which so deeply infects the heart of our country will not compel him to abandon his home to levy the tribute of genius, fame and fortune, in foreign climes.

FROM PORTUGAL.

The following letter was received, by the arrival at New-Bedford, from Lisbon :—

Extract of a letter from an American gentleman in Lisbon, to a Mercantile House in this town, dated July 17.

"We get but little information that can be depended on. We only know, that the last fortified town in Spain near the frontiers of Portugal, Ciudad Rodrigo, has surrendered to the French. This town has a plain round it of 4 or 5 miles in extent ; but so fearful were the British and Portuguese armies of having a general battle there, that they have suffered it to be starved out, for want of the necessary succours, and, in consequence, obliged to surrender—although the army was in sight the whole time of its siege. I however believe there will be some hard battles fought before the British leave this country. For, as Lord Wellington, is at the head of the army here, and his brother being Prime Minister at home, the existence of the present Ministry will depend on defending this country."

FROM HOLLAND.

Extract of a letter from a mercantile house of great respectability in Rotterdam, to a gentleman in this town, dated 13th July 1810.

"Our form of government has again changed—The King has abdicated the throne, and it is said has gone to America. To day the French Moniteur informs us, that we are incorporated into the French Empire. All goods of colonial produce must pay 50 per cent on the value, and are then permitted to be sent into France. Two thirds of the Public Debt is ANNIHILATED, and the remaining one third is consolidated and brought upon the Great Book of the Public Debt of France."

Newport,

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1810.

THE LAST INTELLIGENCE.

The latest news from London is to the 28th of July, and it cannot be considered particularly important, under any aspect.

Holland, as has long been predicted by Mr. Walsh, and others has been officially incorporated with the French Empire, after a paper from Champagny upon the subject, to prepare the way. Amsterdam is made the third city in the Empire. The Duke of Placentia (Le Brun) is made Lieut. General, until the 1st Jan. 1811, when the French administration is to commence. The Duke of Cadore's report, with unparralleled insolence, makes use of the argument that Holland is impoverished, and sunk under the weight of her public debt between 80 and 90 millions, and that her independence has been destroyed, to prove the necessity of the annexation—when it has been owing to French extortion and atrocity, that she is placed under such distressing circumstances in her public affairs. A London paper speaking of the annihilation of the Dutch government by the French Emperor, has the following pertinent remarks :—

"The hatred of Bonaparte will be increased—but the only happy [illegible] we receive from this event will [illegible] commercial charac[illegible], and the [illegible] the military [illegible]. Their commerce is to be annihilated—[illegible] is to be equipped out of [illegible] before the termination of another year—the Dutch seamen, heretofore employed in merchant vessels will be transferred to ships of war, and a naval and military conscription will press the force of the country into the active service of their new Emperor, to dispute with Great-Britain "The sovereignty of the sea." Such is her happiness—the happiness of starving and bleeding for a tyrant, who has not scruples to say how much he hates them !

"Thus fall the renowned United Provinces.—After existing for near three centuries in a state of [illegible] prosperity [illegible] of blood, and [illegible] giving birth to some of the most illustrious warriors, statesmen and philosophers, exhibiting to the world the wonderful effects of commerce nurtured by political freedom, [illegible] raising an insignificant plat of [illegible] sufficient in its produce for the [illegible] of its inhabitants, to the rank [illegible] powers often have taken an active part during that time in the great concerns of Europe, and been courted or feared by its most powerful states, they now sink without a struggle into the vortex of French subjection, conquered less by force than by their own divisions, the influence of jacobin principles, and of jacobinical foreigners : thus opening the door to French intrigue, from which they never have been able to disentangle themselves."

From Spain.

The Schooner Rachel, with 200 Merino Sheep, has arrived at Philadelphia, from the neighborhood of Cadiz. She left the coast on the first August : at which time, the report was in circulation, that General Crawford, had fallen in with a large division of the French and was obliged to submit to the sacrifice of nearly 3000 men, before he could extricate himself from the sudden and overwhelming power opposed to him.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE ELECTION.

The Concord Gazette of the 4th inst. has given the votes of 39 towns in Rockingham County, 29 Hillsborough, 18 Strafford, 26 Cheshire and 20 Grafton, total 132 towns, in which the net federal gain is 1297. There are yet to be heard from, 7 towns in Rockingham, 13 Hillsborough, 18 Grafton, 15 Strafford, 9 Cheshire, 16 Coos—total 78 towns. The prospect of the election of good men brightens daily. The people will require other evidence of talents patriotism and republicanism, than ability to call "Tory" which a parrot can be taught.

Boston Palladium.

The Boston Repertory of yesterday, says, "The Election of New-Hampshire representatives to Congress, we consider as decided in favor of the federal ticket."

MARRIED—At the Friends Meeting-House in this town, on Thursday last, Mr. DAVID BOWEN to Miss ELIZA CHASE, daughter of Capt. Gilbert Chase, all of this town.

DIED.—In this town on Thursday evening last, Mr. GIDEON DAVENPORT, in the 73d year of his age.—His funeral will be this afternoon, at 3 o'clock, from his late residence in Tanner-street, which his relations and friends are requested to attend without a further invitation.

DIED.—At Portsmouth on Tuesday last, JOB DURFEE, Esq in the 78th year of his age.

KINE-POCK INOCULATION.

To the Inhabitants of the Town of Newport.

THE Town of Newport having engaged Mr. SYLVANUS FANSHER to inoculate the inhabitants of said town for the Kine Pock, and having appointed the subscribers a committee to promote and superintend a general inoculation—Notice is hereby given, that the inoculation will take place at the expense of the town, at the following times and places—On Monday, the 17th of Sept. at Mr. Tenney's Meeting-House : on Tuesday at the Episcopal Church : on Wednesday, at Dr. Patten's Meeting-House : on Thursday at Mr. Eddy's Meeting-House : on Friday at Mr. Gibson's Meeting-House : and on Saturday at the Methodist Chapel, from 8 to 11 A. M. and from 3 to 5 P. M. and that all persons inoculated are requested to attend at the same places on the eighth day from the inoculation for examination.

The committee earnestly recommend to their fellow-citizens that they avail themselves of this opportunity to secure themselves and families from the attack of that loathsome and dangerous disease, the Small-Pox. Heads of families will consider that they owe an important duty to their children and domestics, and that if through their inattention the present opportunity should pass unimproved, those who had a right to depend confidently on their vigilance and affection, may reproach them with having unnecessarily exposed their lives. It ought also to be remembered, that our duty to the community requires us to contribute our exertions, each within his own sphere, to the extermination of that formidable foe to human life, the Small Pox, and that the Kine Pock offers the only remedy for this end, and the only hope of its final extirpation.

When the Inhabitants of the town of Newport, recollect the expence and confusion so often suffered by reason of the breaking out of the Small Pox, and above all, the anxiety and distress of individuals occasioned by the frequent recurrence of this calamity, the Committee hope that all who are not already secured from infection, will apply to Mr. FANSHER, at the times and places prescribed, to secure the town from the danger to be justly apprehended from the Small-Pox. It is expected Doctor Benjamin Waterhouse, a native of this town, and to whom the United States are greatly indebted for the early communication and adoption of the Vaccine Inoculation, will attend during the inoculation in Newport, and by his advice and great experience in this disorder will be enabled to render great assistance to Mr. Fanher

The Committee request that no Cigars be smoked in the buildings designated, as the place is dangerous and to many offensive. The women who attend to be inoculated are requested to wear short or loose sleeves.
